A Naval Court.

H. B. M. s Minister Resident and Consul General, has convened a Naval Court, to investigate into the causes of the standing of the British steamship Miowera. The Court met at 10 o'clock this forenoon.

The Minister is the President of the Court. Captain H. W. Mist, G. Douglas Freeth Esq. and Captain J. Parry of the bark "county of Merioneth" are members of the Court. Major James W. Robertson is the clerk of the Court.

The Advertiser is wrong in stating this morning that the Queen is giving a luau and hookupu in honor of Princess Kaiulani's birthday to-day. A luau will be given by the Libunakani Educational Society.

Mr. Charles Betts an old employee of the Spreckelsville plantation was found drowned near the head waters of the great Spreckels ditch of which he had been the superintendent for many years. The jury's verdict was accidental drowning. The deceased who was favorably known on Maui suffered from heart disease which probably was the cause of his sad end.

The steamers Claudine, Iwalani, Wainalea and Jas. Makee, are up to leave on their respective routes tomorrow afternoon.

THE P. G. ARMY.

Turns out on Palace Square.

A so-called battalion drill was performed before a large and very appreciative audience on Palace Square last Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock, under the command of "Colonel" Soper one of the commanders-in-chief of the forces. For the sake of those of the men who "have been there before" and the few officers who knew their business, we should mildly suggest that until the battalion is in a better shape and a little more drilled the public exhibition takes place on the grounds in front of the old barracks or in some more secluded place. It must be embarrassing for the parties mentioned to take part in such a droll affair as was the drill last Saturday.

The men undoubtedly did their best, but how is it possible to make soldiers—not for the battle field, but for the parade ground—out of men who never have been taught gymnastics and who have been gathered together without the slightest regard to shape, or gait, or form. Captain Ziegler's company presented the best appearance, but we hardly believe it was even satisfactory to him. The men are evidently not taught to "march." They bob their knees up and down like spavined horses without gaining any ground. Carl Willing was about the only man on the ground who marched. The manner in which the Colonel and his staff ran around was very humorous. The great commander-in-chief generally assumed the well-known attitude of Napoleon, and never responded to the salute of his next in command, or his adjutant when these officers reported to him. Napoleon Soper should not eat fat pork for dinner, before a battalion drill; it sticks in the throat and makes the commands indistinct and very unmusical—and then when he commands a battalion he should cease addressing them as a company.

The commanding officers evidently consider it imposing, and healthy for the rifles to have the men bring them to the ground with a thud not by any means a simultaneous thud, but sounding like hail on a corrugated iron roof. It is characteristic of the army that the battalion always was headed by the doctor the quartermaster general and the commissariat officer. Undoubtedly the man who pays the money, the man who furnishes the grub, and the man who doctors them after eating it, are the most important functionaries in the P. G. Army, but still it would look better if they were allowed to stay at home or keep quiet behind the colonel. Where by the way was the ambulance? Did the Doctor carry one in his pocket?

We admit cheerfully that it was a grand sight to see the Surgeon General with a white handkerchief inserted between the buttons of his uniform trying to vaccinate himself and Mr. Hall with his formidable sword, but isn't it dangerous? Councillor Emmeluth looked brave, but gloomy—as if he was going to collect a bill from a refractory debtor. The drummers took particular pain to look the "other way" whenever they passed the Colonel, probably being afraid of being dazzled by the splendor of the staff and so lose the marching time.

The battalion so far makes a poor showing, and we suppose that the exhibition was mostly for the purpose of showing off the new uniforms for which the taxpayers have paid. The audience was large and treated the whole affair as a burlesque or a circus—even the P. G. supporters could not look at the men running a-muck without giving, went to their amusement.

The Chief Justice was the most conspicuous person on the grounds keeping near by a gentleman with a kodak presumably desiring to be embodied in a picture with the dead and dying heroes. In spite of His Honor's efforts to follow the Colonel's example and do the Napoleon act he looked more to the public like Pickwick Esq. than like the great soldier. Another drill is promised for next week. If the government would sell tickets to the show Mr. Damon would finally find a source for financial revenue besides peddling postage stamps.

A man was standing on the corner of Nuuanu and King Streets looking with a half satisfied, half sad expression in his eye at the entrance to the Anchor Saloon. "What ails you friend?" asked a passer by benevolently. The man drew a sigh as full as Cunningham draws a schooner and whispered "I wish I was a giraffe!" asked for an explanation, he wiped a silent tear from his eye and whispered hoarsely: "What bliss to have a throat like a giraffe and let a glass of cold Fredericksburg Export Lager Beer slide slowly down." And then they smole.
